Ludlow business men have been in terested in a proposition by Richard Halford, a Maine manufacturer, looking toward the starting of the wheels in at least a part of the "old mill," which has been silent so long. This proposition involves the occupancy of the first floor of the mill with one unit of spinning machinery for the manufacture of worst ed yarn, the plan being to employ from to 50 hands at the outset and develop the business to larger proportions as rapidly as possible. Ludlow people were to be asked to furnish half the capital, Mr. Halford to supply the other half. The matter is still under consideration.

"But for the Grace of God-There Go I." In the December Woman's Home Companion there is a most interesting talk on charity. Following is an extract:

"Once anecdoate especially, I recokon to have increased my charity tenfold, they shall walk and not faint." At the It was that one told of a great man Methodist church the pastor, Rev. E. F. who, seeing a poor and drunken wretch Newell will preach on "Heaven's Re-reeling along the street, said with keen sources Within Calling Distance." The he stret, said with keen wit and still keener charity to his companion, 'There, but for the grace of God, so striking an anecdote. It did not seem m. so to me when I first read it, but it came back to me again and again, and each time it enriched me. For again and again, when I saw someone doing what would have considered beneath me to do; when I saw someone a prey to some weakness not mine, the gentle tolerance of that great man would point out to me that but for the grace of God, but or the better advantages, the greater blessings, the lesser temptations in my own life, I, too, might be even as this person was. Over and over it came to me to remember, but for the grace of God-there go L!

"I have heard a good many sermonion charity, but this little incident in great man's life seems to me a better sermon than them all.'

Theatrical Manager Says Chorus Girls Alone Can't Make a "Show."

In the December American Magazine, Walter Prichard Eaton, theatrical editor of that periodical, publishes an interest ing article, which he calls "Building Show." In the course of his article he prints an interview with George Marion, who is one of the most successful of 'show" builders in the country. Marion is a man of many gifts, once an actor in the old Boston Museum stock com-pany, stage manager of such diverse pieces as George Ade's comedy, "The College Widow"; the modern morality, "Everywoman," and the operetta, "The Merry Widow," Marion has trained hundreds of chorus girls, but here is what he says: "'Nothing goes so far with the public in any kind of a play as charm, and a stage manager, to create charm, must good dramatic situations to work with, good music, good voices. You can hitch chorus girls together with ribbon reins and drive 'em around the stage, or turn 'em into rabbits, or swing 'em out over the audience, or mass 'em in living flags, or what not: but it won't take the place of a beautiful melody or a sound dramatic situation.

"'You can't put it too strongly to the men who write and the men who compose musical comedies, that it isn't their business to rely on the stage manager to make a song "go." Their business is to write a song that can stand on its own legs, both in words and music. Their business is not to ask the stage manager to disguise their poverty of plot and dramatic and musical charm, but to give im a plot which he can translate into vivid stage terms, and charm which he can drill his own company to impart All my stage experience has taught me that the better the book and the music, the larger the success will be, and the better will be the work the stage mannger will put into it. What we need to-day is an increased respect for musi cal comedy among educated writers and composers. We need better men in the business, and they should take it more seriously. They can't write a plot that's
